A solid finish on a Fender-style body (i.e. no binding, no logo work etc.) might be as low as $200 from a local luthier – whilst a full refin on a 335 could easily reach $600. Double that if you ask the Gibson restoration department to take on the work. At these prices it is obviously not economical to refinish the vast majority of new instruments.

What is the cost of refinishing a guitar – Guitar Fact

The body was then prepared & re-finished in a natural satin 2K Acrylic clear coat. Some of the electrics were corroded & the control pots were replaced. All soldering was checked for dry joints, re-soldered & rewired where necessary. The original bone nut had broken so a replacement was fabricated from a bone blank.
